Q. What is the Company's contingency plan if the TransCanada expansion is delayed or is not completed? Explain how the Company would recover costs associated with the TransCanada project and the related Union project, assuming the TransCanada piece is not completed and the Union piece is completed.

A. In the event that the TransCanada expansion is either delayed or not completed, the Company would initially seek to purchase replacement supplies at Waddington. If the delay was expected to be of significant duration, the Company would seek the least cost reliable alternative supply or capacity to meet its firm sendout requirements.

In the unlikely event of a delay or termination of the TCP project, the Company would seek to recover any costs incurred in accordance with applicable Department regulations as prudently incurred gas costs.

As discussed in the testimony of John Allocca (exhibit JEA-1) the Company determined that the benefits to its customers under these contracts outweighed the risk that either the TransCanada or Union project would be delayed or cancelled. While there is some risk that either or both of these projects might be delayed, if the Company had not entered into these agreements, its customers would face the virtual certainty of higher gas prices.
